New Everglades School Ready For Classes Monday

The new Everglades school building will receive its final inspection this week and will be put into use by pupils and teachers beginning Monday, F. J. Frankenhoff, chairman of the county school board announced on Wednesday.

The inspection will be made by James A. Stripling, architect.

The new building contains five classrooms, a library, an office and two restaurants. It is of modern design and of concrete block construction.

Classes in the elementary grades will be taught in the new building.

Originally scheduled for completion last fall, construction of building was delayed by the nationwide shortage of steel framing needed for doors and windows.

Contractor for the construction job is J. C. MacDonald of Fort Myers who was low bidder on the project.
